Many people have come out with various stands on the currently most controversial problem in the United States, perhaps in the whole-the so-called war in Viet Nam. However, the word war does not seem to be applicable to what is going on in Viet Nam. In a war, all participants try to achieve ultimate victory and conquer the other side. No matter what, therefore, the saying "all is fair in love and war." If the United States is at war with Hanoi, it seems that this thing to do would be to annihilate Hanoi. Wiping off the map, just like that. Just as Hanoi would gladly wipe New York off the map, I realize that there are more deeply underlying issues involved. Wiping Hanoi off the map would accomplish very little. We have to face up to the threat posed by Russia and China, which loom larger as each day goes by. If it weren't for our real enemies, the communists, that is, there would not be a Viet Nam. There would not have been a Korea. There would not be constant tension and fear in the world. Then we could concentrate on such charitable deeds as wars on poverty and "great societies."

In our age everyone is afraid of coming to a showdown on any issue. The thing to do seems to be for one to turn his head the other way and worry that things will go away. Sometimes they do, but most of the time they just seem to leave us. They reappear later as larger problems, one that we cannot handle anymore. If General MacArthur would have been allowed to cope with the problem of China while it was handy, China would not be posing us. If General MacArthur would have been allowed to cope with the problem of China while it was handy, China would not be posing us.

NSGA Meets

The Legislative Council of last Wednesday approved the charter for a foreign language honor society, which was founded and meant to stir up interest. The council was again for evaluation in February, 1968. The college's programs were accredited for various reasons, but there was not an identifiable fault in the administration too hasty. The Legislative Council decided that the quadragenarian must capture the essence of the average college play, the small circle of spectators and central scene of action not only brought the audience closer to the players but united the audience in their involvement.

SCORE programs in English, mathematics, science, social science, music and art are being offered. The college would be unwise to overlook them. The phenomenon of the character perfectly in a performance of this quality, the frivolous boy king, the arbitrary sovereign, and the sinister plotter were combined in one character without confusion. The petitions, the hunting, the war, and diplomacy were all at actor Shropshire's command bringing this ambiguous character to life. Only in some scenes of passion and excitement was any identifiable for the excellent lighting and costuming in the play and for the players but united the audience in their involvement. Special recognition must be given to the director, Let's Fight Arthur Dewar.

seem to have solved the problem in the Congo fairly satisfactorily. Why do you think the Russians are involved in Viet Nam?

SMITH: Undoubtedly, it scores points for them diplomatically and politically. May be they can't refuse to help themselves. Maybe the U.S. can't either. However, the Russian aid is very minimal in comparison with the American aid. If our aid were limited to the amount of Russian aid, there wouldn't be a war.

HTN: Why not?

SMITH: By this time, the other side would have won. How do you mean the other side?

SMITH: The National Liberation Front.

HTN: By saying that they would have won by now, did you mean that the North is stronger than the South?

SMITH: No. They would not have won in a battle sense. They would have won in a sense, because I think that they could have worked out a government which would have included some of them.

HTN: Do you think that the National Liberation Front is a communist organization?

SMITH: No.

HTN: Do you think that the National Liberation Front is trying to do what is best for the country?

SMITH: Frankly, I don't know enough about the NLF, I think the people in it are certainly trying to do what is best. However, I do not approve of their methods.

HTN: In other words, you don't approve of any war-like measures? SmiTH: It really isn't a matter of approving or disapproving. There are times when one might be justified in engaging in warfare. The 2nd World War, for example, was a justified war on the part of the U.S.

HTN: Do you think that Korea was justified?

SMITH: If you assume that the United States was led into it at the call of the United Nations it was, if not, it wasn't. However, Korea was different from Viet Nam. An organised army had crossed the border from the North. In Viet Nam, no evidence points to any substantial aggression until long after the United States was there.

HTN: Does this mean to say that in the case of Viet Nam the United States was the aggressor?

SMITH: I don't want to say that the United States is an aggressor. I think our foreign policy tries to see the issues of the world in black and white. This is the fault of the Italian policy. We try to assume the roles of good guys fighting bad guys, I think the Vietnamese should work out their own problems. Every nation ought to have the opportunity to have a civil war.

HTN: What happens if, as in the case of Viet Nam, the U.S. is asked for help, should we ignore the plea?

SMITH: If it is going to involve the U.S. in a civil war, we should say no, unless we're sure that our side is going to win.

HTN: Does knowing that our side is going to win justify entering the war?

SMITH: No, it doesn't, but it might justify some aid. Whatever happens in Viet Nam the U.S. is going to have to work with the winner.

HTN: Why?

SMITH: It would be to the economic advantage of the U.S.

Hortense Helps

We are two very much concerned girls. We are concerned about our boyfriends. They are pledged in a certain fraternity on the Hill, and as such were taken on road trips last weekend. As everyone knows, it was extremely cold. The coldness seems to have made them somewhat stiff, and the weekend was somewhat... well, not the same. If the cold persists and they continue to avoid our parts, we are afraid our relationships will suffer. What can we do?

CONCERNED GIRLFRINDS

Dear Girlfriends: It seems to me that a good dose of charm and beauty should certainly thaw them out.

CONCERNED GIRLFRIND

Dear Budde:

Someone sent me this picture with the intention of showing you that some people never grow up. This picture of one of our star basketball players very convincingly demonstrated the fact.

Dear Budde,

I am a senior girl who plans to be married to a junior boy. Before we started dating we were both almost engaged to others. I think that I got over him, but I don’t think he got a chance to see if he really still goes for his old flame. Give a party and invite him to it. Make sure you throw the two of them together in every available opportunity. Do not observe them directly, but have your girlfriends watch them closely and report the developments to you. This is Moment of course that you could distract her new flame long enough.

Panther Recap

BY BUDDY SULLIVAN, Sports Editor

A New Years Eve rematch with Oglethorpe was last year's most exciting game for LaGrange College basketball fans. Oglethorpe defeated the Panthers, 83-70, in the Huntingdon Invitational Tournament.

A PLAY-OFF WITH THE INDEPENDENTS FOR THE INTRAMURAL BASKETBALL TITLE.

LaGrange College was denied a spot in the tournament by a final score of 83-70. The Panthers' tournament hopes were dashed by a loss to powerhouse Oglethorpe, 83-70.

Two weeks later, before a screaming home crowd, the Panthers upset highly favored Georgia State, 75-71 in overtime. This was probably the high-water mark of the season. The season ended by 61-54, however, as the team came back from a 55-6 halftime deficit (it really was 25-6) to down the powerful Georgia State, 75-71.

LaGrange then traveled to Montgomery to defend its title in the Huntingdon Invitational Tournament but lost out by an upset in the first round to William Carey, 83-70.

So ended a 12-15 season. Bad year, you say? Not really. As for the individual performers, statistical evidence is offered to show the standout performers in their respective categories. As a conclusion, all that can be said is that we wait and see what happens next year with seven regulars returning.

Scoring average: (1) Joe Phillips — 15.1, (2) Earl Holmes — 12.2, (3) Tom Dockett — 11.6, Field Goal Pet. (1) Earl Holmes — 89%, (2) Joe Phillips — 87%, (3) Tom Dockett — 80.0%, (4) Sid Smith — 76.5%, (5) Tom Dockett — 69.2%, (6) Sid Smith — 62.1, (7) Mike Pullen hit 3 for 3 for 100%.
